SESSIONS DESCRIPTIONS

I. GENERAL SESSIONS: General Sessions are intended to provide a broad, general perspective of the topic. Sessions are held in large rooms and led by a panel of three or four speakers. There is limited interaction with the audience as a result of the size and scope of the presentation.

II. SEMINARS: Seminars are intended to be a more in depth discussion of the topic. They are usually led by two or three practitioners in the field with substantial prior experience on the topic. Interaction with the audience is encouraged but the session speakers are expected to control and limit discussion as well as covering all of the subject matter described in the outline of the session. Depending on the description of the session, seminars may be at an advanced level. *

III. WORKSHOPS: The most interactive of the sessions offered, workshops typically are led by two practitioners with a substantial level of experience in the topic area. Interaction between the workshop leaders and the audience is encouraged and expected, with the freedom to stray from the outline and address audience concerns in a more specific and detailed fashion. Depending on the description of the session, workshops may be at an advanced level. *

IV. BREAKFAST ROUNDTABLES: The roundtables are organized as informal discussions among industry professionals regarding specified topics. The roundtable leader is not expected to have prepared any written materials. The leader is there to guide the discussion and ask questions of the roundtable participants for discussion amongst themselves. Roundtable leaders are chosen for their prior experience with the topic.

*Advanced Level Sessions assume that session attendees have a basic to intermediate level of knowledge of the topic.
